“RISE”

with Susan Jackson

Gifted children are a highly variable group, and learning to identify them, especially when they are underachieving or not engaged, requires a deeper understanding of the ways that gifted kids can be inherently different. Susan Jackson will be showing her last documentary, “RISE”, and then will lead an in-depth discussion. “RISE” lays bare some of the struggles and behaviours that gifted children experience and exhibit, to promote understanding and identification.

About Susan Jackson

P. Susan Jackson is the Founder and Therapeutic Director of “The Daimon Institute for the Highly Gifted” in White Rock, BC. This international institute offers service to highly and profoundly gifted children and adults supporting the learning needs and overall development of this exceptional population. Ms. Jackson’s clinical work spans 25 years, comprising over 40,000 hours of psychotherapy. She is the author of numerous articles and chapters in the gifted education literature. Her Integral Practice for the Gifted™ model addresses multiple aspects of human functioning – cognitive, emotional, spiritual, physical and talent based dimensions – and explains how advanced cognition influences all of these elements, the Self and the expression of talent. Sue is the past chair of the Counseling and Guidance Network and a member of the advisory board for Supporting Emotional Needs of the Gifted (SENG).

Admission and childcare are free.
